'I'm thinking of the possibilities of this.' 'Don't think of the possibilities of anything. Do it.' This is the catch phrase of a lifetime. It's the catch phrase for the Houdini of our era, but it's also true. If you want to do something, do it. And then don't think about it." – Jonathan Safran Foer, Writer "Remember this: Talent is God-given. Beggars can't be choosers. Effort is what you've got when choice is gone." – Jonathan Safran Foer, Writer "As the mass of people no longer have the choices which are available at the turn of the nineteenth century, they turn to literature. The first record of mass literacy may be the book." – P. G. Wodehouse "Writing is a self-conscious craft, and it is hard to name its practitioners. 'Anglers' is the name I give those who take pleasure in persistent discomfort. There is no disgrace in being an angler. On the contrary, those who possess the confidence to make no attempt to run before the wind of their own invention, who rely only upon what can be found in nature, and who can draw on a supply of materials unlimited and inexhaustible, are the true creatives of fiction. 'Constructors' is the name I give to those who enjoy the challenge of devising novel forms. To construct is to build; you can always do something else afterwards." – Anthony Burgess "If you're in the habit of finding yourself in the middle of a story, and you don't know whether it
